CASE CLOSING

Case A: Rochelle, 36, had been staying in a sober shelter for two months when she entered RRH. Within 60 days, her case manager helped her secure a one-bedroom apartment with rent of $520 (including utilities) and a part-time job 20 hours/week at $9/hour, or about $720/month. RRH has been subsidizing the rent by $200/month for three months. When making home visits, the case manager has twice found Rochelle intoxicated. Rochelle firmly declined treatment, saying she is not an alcoholic.

Case B: After being evicted for failure to pay rent, Danny, 25, Stella, 24, and their two children (Michael 7, Arleen, 4) were staying in a family shelter when they applied for RRH. The case manager negotiated a return to their previous housing by promising to pay their two months of rental arrears and guaranteeing a rental subsidy for another 4 months. Their income is now $1400 and their 2-bedroom apartment costs $840. The guaranteed rental subsidy of $200/month is supposed to last three more months.

Case C: Jerry, 61, was living with several men under a bridge when he was approached by an outreach worker and subsequently enrolled in RRH. He has no income, so his case manager is subsidizing the entire cost of his new $610 Single-Room-Occupancy hotel. His case manager has been pursuing SSI; she is SOAR-trained and has submitted a good application proving that Jerry is seriously and persistently mentally ill. There is no decision yet. However, Jerry has not been sleeping in his new apartment. He returns to the camp under the bridge.
