Veterans Living with MS: Gloria Baker

Having MS can make even small tasks seem impossible. It is easy to feel like life is something happening to you instead of something that you are doing. These feelings of hopelessness can lead to depression, weight gain, and further disability. When and where MS strikes is not something we decide, but after that diagnosis, we have many choices and opportunities.

Making the Most of Your MS Telehealth Visit

Telehealth is a powerful tool designed to make your healthcare more convenient and efficient. However, this technology can also present some challenges. This article will review tips and tricks to allow Veterans with MS to make the most of their telehealth visits while maintaining a personal connection with their physicians.

Dietary Changes for People with MS

People with chronic diseases such as MS often seek complementary therapies for their disease to help in ways that are otherwise not addressed by conventional treatment modalities. Diet can make people with MS feel that they can take charge of their disease.
Updates on 3rd COVID-19 Shots for Immunocompromised Populations and the COVID-19 Booster

The MS Centers of Excellence recommend 3rd COVID-19 vaccination and booster shots following the evolving guidance of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and National MS Society. Logistics for Veterans obtaining these doses occurs at the local facility level.
