Women Vets Speak Out

Hooray for Kids Day

By Kristi Bell, National Special Events

Kids Day at the 2010 Games will be held tomorrow at City Park from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Afterwards, kids are invited to enjoy lunch and entertainment at the big picnic at the City Park Pavilion.

Kids Day was started at the 21st National Games in New York City and has been a part of the Games every year since. This year, 12 Veteran athletes will serve as mentors for local children with disabilities; introducing them to a few of the many sports and recreational opportunities available to them through adaptive sports and recreational programs. This year, the mentors will be instructing the children in slalom, T-ball and basketball.

Mentors work firsthand with the children, teaching them not only the rules of the sports but also about having confidence in their abilities.

A special ceremony takes place at the end of the program when the mentors present all participating children with their own medals, recognizing their accomplishments and good sportsmanship.

Veterans at the Games all know how much fun and beneficial sports can be and are looking forward to sharing their experiences in adaptive sports with the children of Denver. Veterans interested in becoming a mentor for Kids Day at the 2011 Games should contact Sheila Skipper from PVA's Washington D.C. office at sheilas@pva.org.

If you're in the area tomorrow, stop by the Kids Day venue and cheer for the kids!

Common Ground

The Greatest Generation and the Latest Generation

By Sandy Franks, Public Affairs Officer, Shreveport VA Medical Center

Wayne Field is an Army Veteran, so is Chris Sullivan. Field is a Purple Heart recipient, so is Sullivan. Both joined the Army at age 18, both were wounded in combat. Although there is a 57-year difference in their ages, there is common ground. This is Field's 18th year at the Wheelchair Game; as a novice, it is Sullivan's first.

A World War II Veteran, Field lives in Colorado Springs. At age 55, he began competing in the Senior Olympics because he felt he had let himself go. He started with swimming and could just barely swim one lap. Today, he keeps active and always looks forward to the Games. "It is the driving force to practice and maintain my fitness level," he said. "I enjoy everything [at the Games]. I love everybody I meet. It's fun and makes me happy. You can look back and go down or look forward and go up – I choose up."

Sullivan lives in Dallas, Texas and is a prosthetics intern for VA. In his job, he serves Veterans with disabilities and believes that participating in the Games is leading by example. Sullivan said, "I like the look I see in the Veterans eyes here; they are excited and enthusiastic. It feels normal to be here; it's easier here. If you're walking, you're in the minority. I see guys worse off than me doing more than me... it motivates me to do more." His best experience so far is finishing the slalom. "I started strong but lost some of my stamina – but I finished and that was great."

Women Veterans & Sports...

Still Blazing Trails

By Sandy Franks, Public Affairs Officer, Shreveport VA Medical Center

Women Veterans are one of the fastest growing segments of the Veteran population. By 2020, VA estimates that 10 percent of all Veterans will be women. This week, 61 ladies are competing in the Denver Games. They represent every branch of service and range in age from 24 to 86.

Air Force Veteran Terri Fuda from Missouri is competing in her third Wheelchair Games. Fuda credits her recreation therapists with getting her involved in competition and her coaches with giving her the confidence to participate. She says, "The thrill of competition is exhilarating and gives me a purpose." A single parent, Fuda names her son Dylan, 17, as her biggest supporter. She competes in swimming, discus, javelin, air guns and bowling this week.

Celeste Phelps, of Winchester, Ind., has always been an athlete. An Army Veteran, she is competing in her fourth Wheelchair Games and has also attended the Winter Sports Clinic. She first went to the Games at the urging of the recreation therapy staff and other Veterans at the Dayton VA Medical Center. She especially enjoys being a mentor for Kids Day, and would like to start a sports program for children with disabilities. She says, "The Games opened windows for me when doors were closed. I especially enjoy the camaraderie with the other athletes and appreciate all the volunteers who help us and cheer us on." In Denver, Phelps is competing in archery, nine-ball, weightlifting, javelin and discus.

Local Veteran Diane Marsh, participated in her first Wheelchair Games in 1996 and believes, as she gets older, that participating in the Games is more important to her than the competition. An Army Veteran of the Cold War, Marsh was a member of the Army softball and volleyball teams and taught winter survival training while stationed at Ft. Lewis, Wash. She enjoys the camaraderie with other Veterans and has made some great friendships. Every time she comes to the Games she continues to be amazed at the determination and commitment of her fellow athletes. She competes this week in handcycling and bowling.

Dorris Merrill, 86, is among the senior competitors this week. A Navy WAVE, Merrill was assigned to Naval Intelligence from 1944-48. She competed in her first Wheelchair Games in 1999 and had no idea what she was in for but went home with four gold medals. A resident of Nanitoke, Pa., she is here with her son, Pepper. Merrill says, "I meet so many wonderful people (at the Games). "They have so many skills and they don't quit. You forget your disabilities. We are abled, not disabled." Merrill is competing in bowling, air guns, slalom, powerchair 200 and the motor rally.

A special salute all of the women Veterans here this week – you go, girls!

Rest for the Best (Results)!

During the competitions this week, you are pushing your body to its limits so make sure to get plenty of rest. Rest is one of the most important aspects of doing well in sports. It allows your body to recover from the rigors of competition.

Sleep can account for up to 40 percent of rest and recovery after competition, and at least eight hours a night is recommended. Another key component to rest and recovery is warming up before and cooling down after competing. Five to ten minutes of light exercise prior to competing in your event will increase blood flow through your tissues, making them more supple and ready to be stretched. Slowly cooling down after exercise will help your heart rate return to normal, avoid fainting or dizziness and remove lactic acid from your muscles which can build up during vigorous activity. For an effective cool-down, do five to 10 minutes of low intensity exercise followed by a stretching routine.

Drinking water, taking it easy, protecting your skin and dressing for the weather will help keep you healthy and performing at the top of your game throughout the week. Good health will always help you feel a Mile High!
